

Dear Saltaire Library Family,

This weekend would usually be the unofficial opening of our library doors, filled with warm embraces and reminiscing of winter adventures off our beloved island. As you may have heard, the library is closed following state and local government mandates. We know this virus has affected everyone in our community in different ways and we are thinking of each of you during these unprecedented times.

While we may not be able to be in the physical library this weekend, rest assured that we have been busy brainstorming ways to offer programs in safe and engaging ways, even if they look different than years past. You can expect more programming details from us in the coming days and weeks.

We look forward to the day where we can all be together reading, playing, catching up with friends, and making new memories in the library. The bottom line is...we miss you!

Happy Reading!
